H. THE PRESSURE TEST Reading comprehension

Street food: the world on a plate

In Mexico, people eat tacos on the street. In Japan, they buy takoyaki — small balls of batter with octopus inside. In Turkey, there is simit, a bread ring covered with sesame seeds. In Brazil, there is pastel, acarajé and pão de queijo. Street food is different in every country, but it always has three things in common: it is fast, it is cheap and it is local.

Chefs are paying attention. Many famous restaurants now put street food on the menu — with a much higher price. A taco that costs two dollars on the street can cost fifteen dollars in a restaurant. Is it the same taco? The ingredients are usually better. The experience is definitely different.

But many cooks say the best version is still the one you eat standing up, on a busy street, with your hands.

Glossary: batter = massa líquida • octopus = polvo • in common = em comum • cheap = barato • standing up = de pé
